

C4SEM

As the Chairman of the Board, I often make the case that Center for Security and Emergency Management (C4SEM) is a unique resource in the field of security and emergency management training and consulting organizations. I can make this claim for three reasons.

First, C4SEM is built upon an academic model through which we provide both objective research and client-centered training and consulting services. Our mission and vision shape our core research, training and consulting services, ensuring that those services are insightful and academically and technically rigorous. And, our consulting practice keeps our research program rooted in the real world – the world that our clients are facing today.

Second, all of the work that we do – be it our training, consulting, our research or our mission projects – is informed by our systems perspective. That perspective begins by recognizing that there is no single solution. Security and emergency management depend on a complex fabric of national and international security policies and politics that are constantly interacting, evolving and ultimately shaping our strategies. As researchers, we are trained to see and understand the larger environment in which problems arise and for which sustainable solutions can be crafted.

Finally, the diversity of perspective and background found in our team is matched only by the diversity of clients whom we serve and challenges that we address across the continuum of security and emergency management programs. We have many voices within our organization but only one purpose: to deliver comprehensive, systematic solutions that improve safety and security.

Sincerely,

Mehran Rastakhiz, Ph.D., MPA

C4SEM Trainings

Training and exercises are essential components of a comprehensive approach to preparedness, planning and response. Training activities bolster the security and emergency response capabilities of the community, and organization. Exercises provide opportunities for applied training as well as practical evaluation of the capabilities; when integrated effectively into a comprehensive cycle of preparedness efforts, training and exercises provide the essential reinforcement and feedback for the community and the organization to build effective security and emergency management capabilities to prevent, protect against, respond to, and/or recover from all hazards.

Center for Security and Emergency Management (C4SEM) goal is to provide agencies involved in security and emergency management efforts with a unique insight into security, counter terrorism and emergency management doctrines, philosophy and applications. C4Sem offers theoretical and tactical seminars on strategic defense against natural and man-made disasters and terrorist attacks. These seminars are specifically designed for first responders, U.S. military, law enforcement, and civil defense agencies.

C4SEM develops and maintains professional partnerships with many public and private institutions so that we may meet the emergency training needs of communities and organizations. Based upon periodic program reviews and needs assessment surveys, the C4SEM develops and implements new curricula and courses, offers ongoing legacy training programs, and provides training and exercise funding to various organizations and agencies. The C4SEM meets training needs by offering its academic courses as well as utilizing available Federal training resources.
